Dear BWW Client

We don't provide copyrights for the images which has been used in your solution unless otherwise you exclusively purchased them to be used on the site

The web is made of millions of images, these are re-used, recycled and modified and floats around. When we do a web project – We take the images off Google, free sites and image pool sites. We don't take it off other websites. But a free image site can have an image which has been taken off other websites. It is difficult to prove this as there are billions of images.

However if you want clear documents so that no one can find legal loop holes then you should purchase the images

You might raise a question why we did not purchase it – We don't purchase image for any client as images are very expensive, Getty can charge for a few images which can be a very considerable sum. The second reasons is when a query of an image right is raised the image right purchase license has to be in the company's name not ours.

We thought we will highlight this out to you so that when you have some free time you can purchase some image. Even if you don't, the chances are extremely rare that someone can back track to an image copyright issue.

We do hundreds of websites and we have not had an issue so far. But if you want to be safe then we recommend you to purchase a few images and save the download licenses for future ref.

Thanks,

Regards,

BenWorldwide Administrative Team
